

BECAUSE OF YOU

2022/23 ANNUAL DONOR REPORT

Revolutionizing Healthcare

As we look forward to our future, we see you – our incredible donor community, our people, our partners, who have stood beside us as we revolutionize healthcare to create extraordinary advances in science, clinical care, and research.

In the pages that follow, we celebrate the impact of your support. Your generosity is fuelling exceptional care, world-leading research and innovative health solutions for those coming through our doors and beyond. You are helping advance equitable and accessible healthcare for women and everyone, ensuring that Women’s College Hospital continues its path of excellence as a leader in the health system.

We hope that as you read these stories, you see yourself reflected back – along with the commitment, passion, and unstoppable generosity that has grown from your support and the power of your partnership.

We are forever grateful to have you by our side.

a message from the FOUNDATION

This year marks the 140th anniversary of Women's College Hospital, a hospital that has always disrupted the status quo in its pursuit of equitable healthcare.

For 140 years, the hospital has benefited from the unwavering support and generosity of our community – a community that has consistently come together to take a stand for equity, and to ensure that the unique needs of women and equity-seeking communities are considered in research and care. This year has been no exception in showcasing the power of this partnership.

Despite the challenges of a shifting social and economic landscape, our donors remained steadfast in their commitment and determination to drive transformational healthcare system change – a true testament to how passionately our community believes in the shared values and mission of Women's College Hospital.

Because of you, our exceptional donors, our Foundation was able to raise over $16 million for our Hospital last year to provide funding directly to several vital, groundbreaking programs and positions across the hospital.

From research that intentionally addresses the unique needs of women, to new state-of-the-art diagnostic imaging equipment that will significantly shorten wait times for screening and provide earlier detection of cancers to save lives, to moving the donor-funded Peer Navigator position in our Crossroads Clinic from vision to reality, you have made this possible.

From the entire staff and board at Women's College Hospital Foundation, we wholeheartedly thank you for your commitment, generosity, and support.

We look forward to another 140 years of partnership that will continue to drive transformational change.

With gratitude,
Chaim & Debbie

a message from the HOSPITAL

Women's College Hospital pursues our vision of a healthier, more equitable world each and every day. The work we undertake to enhance healthcare within our organization and across the system demonstrates our commitment to think differently and create solutions that meaningfully address complexities and intersections of gender, race and social determinants that impact health. For us, this means boldly advocating, innovating and applying our deep expertise so that our diverse communities of patients receive culturally safe, inclusive and compassionate high-quality healthcare.

Choosing a career in healthcare at Women's is driven by a passion to care for others, push the boundaries of science and make meaningful change. The staff, clinicians and scientists at Women's College Hospital continue to uphold our long history of modernizing traditional views and practices and challenging the status quo in pursuit of equity and innovation.

We could not be prouder of our team and the work they do each day. We know our work is made possible by your support. We are enormously grateful for your partnership, your generosity and your belief in our mission to revolutionize healthcare for everyone.

As we look to the future, we are energized by what lies ahead. With you by our side, we know that #TeamWCH will continue to carve new care pathways making healthcare more accessible to people inside our hospital and in their local communities. We will deepen our commitments to equitable care to ensure that no one is left behind and to advance research by envisioning concepts and ideas that would otherwise seem impossible. Simply put, we are the revolutionaries changing the face of healthcare, for everyone.

Thank you,

Revolutionizing Care for Refugees

The mission and purpose of the Crossroads Clinic at Women's College Hospital (WCH), besides providing primary medical care for newly arrived refugees, is to address barriers and solve for gaps in care that are distinct to these populations – complementing the long-standing work being done by our community partners across Toronto.

"The clinic is based off a model of care that's unique to these populations," says Dr. Meb Rashid, Medical Director of the Crossroads Clinic. "We see conditions that would perhaps be a challenge to colleagues in the community, like tropical diseases, language discordance, differing insurance coverage and the manifestation of trauma."

Many refugees and refugee claimants have experienced immeasurable violence, trauma, poverty, and discrimination – with women and children facing disproportionately higher rates of exposure to deep-rooted discrimination and extreme vulnerability. Coupled with the urgency of finding housing and employment, culture shock, and learning a new language, healthcare is often lost – leading to late interventions, potential healthcare risks and complications.

And of course, the clinic is cognizant of the distinct challenges, outside of healthcare, that may present themselves when moving to a new country. This is why their mandate goes far beyond medical care, but also encompasses an entire ecosystem of support, such as social workers, nurse practitioners, and the newly appointed, fully donor-funded position of Peer Navigator.

Based off a globally adopted model of peer support, the Peer Navigator works to support patients emotionally and practically – harnessing their own lived experience to guide patients going through similar experiences. While the idea of peer support is far from novel – the practice of solidarity, care, accountability, and trust has always existed – the Peer Navigator role aims to take this a step further.

Feeding in to WCH's model of care that sees each patient as a whole person, the role aims to close gaps in care that span challenges surrounding language barriers, province-policy questions, and feelings of isolation, among a few. Most importantly, the goal of the Crossroads Clinic is to allow their patients to dream – to feel as though there are a multitude of opportunities that lie in front of them, and they have everything they need in order to reach them.

"When our patients first come to us, they aren't dreaming," says Semhar Musael, an immigrant to Canada herself, and now the clinic's first Peer Navigator. "When your basic needs aren't being met, and you're trying to navigate an entirely new world, you can't dream. We wanted them to dream."

Semhar recalls a patient who had missed her scheduled colonoscopy procedure five times but hadn't left a reason for the missed appointments. "It turned out that she was obligated by hospital policy to have someone accompany her, but she didn't have any connections here in Toronto," acknowledging this as a common and often debilitating barrier to care, Semhar offered to accompany the patient and drive her home.

Research has shown that refugees do very well in Canada when followed out and supported for a sustained, adequate period of time. Rates of employment are high, and rates of mental health issues remain at similar levels to those who are Canadian born. "What we do find is that people need help when they arrive," says Dr. Rashid. "Often, we're seeing people who have never connected with primary care, and there are also unique particularities about the journey of refugees that's different from other immigrants."

According to CBC, one of the world's busiest migrant corridors runs from Central America through Mexico, which is a three-to-five-month journey where migrants face extraordinary threat. Dr. Rashid recounts a patient who completed the journey five months pregnant, recalling haunting memories of bodies, smugglers, and little food or water.

"There's trauma in the migration process. Both pre-migration, where people are taking dangerous and circuitous routes to get here, but also when people arrive – there is so much that challenges them," says Dr. Rashid. "There are also the thoughts of the sister, brother, cousin, or parents they may have left behind, and the anguish that comes from that."

"These are the survivors. It's a very resourceful and industrious community. How we support people and how we ensure that their human capital is preserved becomes critical to ensure they succeed."

And that is, ultimately, the hope of the clinic, for its doctors, staff, and for Semhar. That at the end of the longest journey many of them will ever take, there is still hope. That it was all for something – something bigger than just being here.

"It's about the idea of human connection, to feel like they have someone who understands, listens, and supports them. It is so beyond just helping them fill out forms or schedule appointments. It really is being a friend, a safe haven for them," says Semhar.

She recalls a story of a patient who came in one day without an appointment. When she saw Semhar, she told her she was only there for a hug.

Both Semhar and Dr. Rashid say their experience at Crossroads has been life-changing on a multitude of levels. Life-changing for the clinic's patients, who have found a community and support system, and life-changing for Semhar and Dr. Rashid, who experience first-hand the resounding resilience of the communities they serve.

"I just feel like there's such an opportunity, that if we can provide people with support and bridge that really critical period, there's a lot to gain," says Dr. Rashid.

The critical position of Peer Navigator was made possible through the generous support of donors and partners including The Slaight Family Foundation, J. Susan Monteith and the Vohra Miller Foundation – all of whom are helping newcomers, refugees, and refugee claimants reach their full potential through their support of this vital work.

Supporting Survivors

Meet HART (Human Anti-Trafficking Response Team)

Sex trafficking is a global, billion-dollar industry that destroys lives every day – especially those of vulnerable girls and young women.

“The average age that survivors are first lured or forced into trafficking is between 11 and 13 years of age,” says advocate Kelly Grier-Nadal. “I don’t know how society can accept this.”

In 2017, Kelly founded a not-for-profit organization called HART (Human Anti-Trafficking Response Team), which focuses on raising awareness of sex trafficking in Canada and supporting victims who survive it.

“There’s been a lack of education and awareness for too long, and until now, limited coordinated efforts to address both,” says Kelly. “I’m proud that our $1 million gift to Women’s in 2020 provided the crucial seed funding to begin pioneering research, which aims to improve the health and care of survivors. This was driven by a lack of research-based protocols to define best practices for education, and service provision in critical areas, including social-support agencies and healthcare.”

The gift from HART is supporting a research study overseen by Drs. Janice Du Mont and Robin Mason at Women’s College Research Institute.

“Our research will help us learn how prepared the health, social-service, police and education sectors are to recognize and appropriately respond to survivors,” explains Dr. Du Mont. “Where gaps exist, our plan is to develop resources to address them.

Results of the ongoing study will inform the development of standardized curricula on sex trafficking for healthcare providers.

“By focusing on the issues here [in Canada] and learning from survivors themselves, we hope to bring greater understanding to their needs and contribute to systems change,” says Dr. Mason.

In March 2023, HART sponsored the Women’s College Hospital Foundation (WCHF) webinar “In Conversation With... Rhonelle Bruder on Centring Survivors’ Voices to Combat Sex Trafficking,” in which researcher Rhonelle Bruder explored the importance of evidence-based research and education to helping survivors reclaim their lives after such a traumatic experience.

HART’s sponsorship of the webinar is just the latest example of their continuing commitment to sex-trafficking research and awareness. Within the past year, HART’s leadership in this space has inspired other organizations and partners, such as the Moez & Marissa Kassam Foundation, Peerage Realty Partners and Sotheby’s, to lend their own support to the important work being done by Drs. DuMont and Mason.

As the body of research into sex trafficking continues to grow in 2023 and beyond, healthcare providers will be better equipped with the data, knowledge and insights needed for true innovations in care.

“As Rhonelle spoke about in the webinar, it’s invaluable that survivors are sharing their knowledge to guide the work being done to address this issue moving forward,” says Kelly. “Through our partnership with Women’s, HART feels grateful to be in a position where we can build a platform – and hopefully a movement in healthcare – to respond in the best way we can to support survivors.”

Addressing the Gaps

When Women's Health Collective Canada (WHCC) was founded in 2020 by Women's College Hospital Foundation (WCHF), BC Women's Health Foundation and Alberta Women's Health Foundation, it centred around one core premise: to ensure that Canadian healthcare is more inclusive and intentional about addressing the needs of women.

Too often, women in Canada are misdiagnosed, neglected and dismissed as complainers or told their symptoms are all in their heads by their healthcare providers.

If you assess women's health based on longevity alone, women in Canada appear to be faring well. Life expectancy for a Canadian woman today is 84 years, compared with 80 for men. But merely being alive is a far throw from being able to access life-sustaining, necessary care when and where it's needed.

WHCC aims to change this – for good. As the first alliance between women's health foundations across Canada, their goal is to eliminate inequities by raising awareness about the specific health needs of women throughout their lives and increasing fundraising dollars directed specifically to women's health and research.

This powerful partnership allows WCHF to access resources and funding to address wider gaps in care across the country that we can't tackle on our own. This past year, thanks to the generosity of Shoppers Drug Mart®, WHCC has been able to move the dial towards a more equitable healthcare system for all through their corporate philanthropy and their December LOVE YOU by Shoppers Drug Mart® campaign in support of women's health.

The campaign was a true testament not only to the determination and commitment of Shoppers Drug Mart®, but to the people of Ontario, who gave over $200,000 in support of WCHF through WHCC at self-checkout locations across the province. This was part of a national campaign that raised $600,000 in total.

"We're delighted to help build awareness of WHCC and how it is positively impacting women's health initiatives in Canada," said Paulette Minard, Director of Community Investment, Shoppers Drug Mart®. "Aligning ourselves with such a dedicated and purposeful organization is part of our mission to change the way women and marginalized community members access healthcare."

Thank you, Women's Health Collective Canada and Shoppers Drug Mart®, for your unwavering support of women's health and the future of equitable healthcare!

WOMEN'S HEALTH COLLECTIVE CANADA

Dr. Paula Rochon,
Founding Director,
Women's Age Lab, WCH

WOMEN'S AGE LAB: Living Lives Well

Every woman ages – what's important is how they age.

The majority of older adults and older women are living independently in the community and would like to stay where they are. Women's Age Lab is the first and only research centre of its kind dedicated to creating a better quality of life for older women. Born out of a need to bring sharp focus to this critical topic, Women's Age Lab is committed to advancing science, putting research into action, and raising awareness about, and advocating for, the unique needs of older women.

With the population aging rapidly, healthcare needs to adequately shift to accommodate the needs of older people – and specifically the unique needs of older women – an invisible majority who are often left behind. Women's Age Lab aims to support the healthy aging of women by reimagining a system and society where older women and their distinct well-being and health needs are recognized and addressed.

"Older women continue to face inequities and barriers to healthcare that affect their health and well-being," says Dr. Paula Rochon, Founding Director of Women's Age Lab. "Through research and education, we're using science to transform the aging experience for older women."

This important work is made possible through the generous support of donors and community partners like the Allen Family Foundation, Nancy Ruth, the Naraine Family Foundation, RBC Wealth Management and Women's College Health Research – all of whom are helping Women's Age Lab transform research into real-world results.

Research at Women's Age Lab is centred around four key areas of action aligned with international initiatives: 1) addressing gendered ageism; 2) reimagining aging in place and congregate care; 3) optimizing therapies and prescribing; and 4) promoting social connectedness. The cross-cutting theme is ensuring that all data is disaggregated by sex and age to ensure that researchers learn about older women in everything they study.

IT'S VITAL TO
ARE BEING COUNTED.

It's vital to start making sure that older women are being counted.

Research findings are made accessible to the public through online resources, lunch-and-learn sessions, webinars, podcasts, and educational panels. Published works from Women's Age Lab have been featured in prestigious medical journals and national media – which have led to public conversations about how systemic change can benefit older women and, ultimately, all of us.

Women's Age Lab has also created a downloadable toolkit to help tackle gendered ageism and spread awareness about it in the community. This toolkit is accessible for everyone – including clinicians, researchers, policymakers and community advocates – and is part of a larger gendered-ageism campaign, which addresses institutional and societal biases that contribute to older women being invisible and lacking a voice in their care.

Dr. Rochon aims to spark change well beyond the walls of Women's College Hospital (WCH), demonstrating how the work of Women's Age Lab can improve the lives of older women in ways that are scalable across Ontario and internationally.

For example, Women's Age Lab is currently partnering with University Health Network (UHN), and the Cities of Toronto and Barrie, to improve aging in place through supporting the implementation and evaluation of three enhanced NORC (Naturally Occurring Retirement Communities) supportive-service models across 10 sites in Ontario. We need to rethink how older adults, and particularly older women, age in communities – and NORCs offer a novel, community-based solution to these pressing issues.

"We are grateful for the support of our donors and community partners," says Dr. Rochon. "They are enabling us to increase the impact of our important work by making the science accessible to everyone. Our supporters also enable us to translate research into practice and train the future generation of scientists and clinicians."

Here's to Equitable Health

For 140 years, Women's College Hospital (WCH) has been committed to championing equity and representation in healthcare and research, where every patient, physician, researcher, scientist and community member, have access to the opportunities they need to thrive.

It's through impactful partnerships with corporations such as the LCBO, that Women's College Hospital Foundation (WCHF) has been able to provide funding that underscores the work, values, and mission of WCH and its programs – which provide vital services to our community members.

The LCBO has held true to their promise to keep social responsibility at the heart of their brand through their invaluable partnership with WCHF. Through their Spirit and Sustainability platform, the LCBO and customers across Ontario have donated over $2.8 million in the past year in support of Women's College Hospital's greatest needs, including the Transition Related Surgery (TRS) Program.

As a first of its kind in a publicly funded hospital in Canada, the TRS Program was established in 2019 to support transgender community members through their transitions and make transition-related surgeries more accessible through addressing the significant gaps in access to skilled, primary, emergency, and specialty care services.

This is a dream come true, of sorts,” says Alex Smith*, a TRS Program patient who will be undergoing top surgery. “I was given a chance to have life-saving procedures.

This transformational support will continue to directly advance key programs at WCH and ensure that everyone, across the province and the country, has access to the highest quality care, whenever and wherever they need it.

“Through LCBO’s Spirit of Sustainability platform, we are committed to help create a province where all individuals have equitable access to essential resources needed to live happy, healthy lives,” says George Soleas, President and CEO, LCBO.

Thank you, LCBO leadership, staff and generous community members across Ontario for helping us in our mission to create a healthier, more equitable world!

Coming Together for Women's Health

From fundraising galas to educational seminars, our events brought people together to support Women's College Hospital's (WCH) mission of advancing the health of women and revolutionizing healthcare for all. We celebrate the resilience and determination of our donor community as we persevered to raise critical funds for WCH, both virtually and in-person. Returning to in-person events, after three years apart, was inspiring. We are proud to share the successes of the past year and look forward to many more community gatherings.

WOMEN FOR WOMEN'S 2023

On International Women's Day, March 8, we welcomed a sold-out audience of 900 guests in-person at the Metro Toronto Convention Centre for our signature fundraising gala — Women for Women's. We heard from WCH medical professionals, grateful patients and are thrilled to share that the event raised more than $630,000 to address the greatest and most urgent priority needs at Women's College Hospital, proving once again that our community of supporters and allies can create monumental change towards a more equitable healthcare system.

SHOPPERS RUN FOR WOMEN 2022

On June 11, for the first time in three years, a record number of runners and walkers returned to the grounds of Women's College Hospital to participate in the 10th annual LOVE YOU by Shoppers Drug Mart® Run for Women in Toronto. Over 2,300 people registered to participate either in person or virtually, and the event raised a record-breaking $400,000. The funds raised directly supported the Department of Psychiatry at WCH, one of Canada's largest mental health program with a special focus on the unique mental healthcare needs of women.

BLACK WOMEN'S HEALTHCARE SUMMIT 2022

The 2022 Black Women's Healthcare Summit embodied our unwavering dedication to creating an inclusive and equitable healthcare system for Black women, and for all. With diverse perspectives, dynamic discussions, and innovative ideas, the Summit showcased the power of a community that values inclusion and access for everyone. Close to 200 attendees gathered in-person together to explore and address important questions surrounding systematic inequities within healthcare, and the realities Black women face as they navigate the healthcare system.

IN CONVERSATION WITH... PRIDE TORONTO

Women’s College Hospital Foundation partnered with Pride Toronto to share an important and meaningful conversation during Trans Awareness Week in November 2022. The online webinar featured Dr. Laura Stratton (she/her), Primary Care Physician at WCH, and Yuri Hernandez (they/them), Co-Chair, Board of Directors of Pride Toronto, for an in-depth discussion rooted in lived experience about the importance of self-care in the trans community.

IN CONVERSATION WITH... RHONELLE BRUDER

Rhonelle currently works at Women’s College Research Institute as a Ph.D. Research Trainee on the Addressing Sex Trafficking Through Education and Research (ASTER) team, led by Dr. Janice Du Mont and Dr. Robin Mason. Rhonelle joined WCHF for an eye-opening conversation about sex trafficking, and how research that centres survivors’ experiences is helping to transform care and resources for those who need it most. This event is generously supported by the Human Anti-Trafficking Response Team.

OUR COMMUNITY’S SUPPORT: THIRD-PARTY EVENTS

NEWCHAPTER

Established in 2007, neWCHapter is a group of dedicated and passionate young professionals committed to raising awareness and funds in support of Women’s College Hospital. This past year, neWCHapter engaged our local Toronto communities in various in-person events and workshops, including their annual fitness event, a Charity Ride: Spin and Sculpt.

METALS AND MOUNTAINS

Tierney Courage and Andrew Bradbury were deeply moved by the unwavering support of their care team at Women’s College Hospital. “It’s important for everyone – both men and women – to support women’s health and access to women’s healthcare services,” says Andrew. To give back and bring their community together, the couple decided to hold a fundraiser in support of WCH which raised over $26,000.

Celebrating a Legacy of Passion for Health

“ Our family feels it’s important to support Women’s College Hospital Foundation because we want to make a difference. Karen was proud to support Women’s over the years. When she was ill and she received care here, everyone was so kind and wonderful to her. We’ll never forget that and we’ll always be grateful. This is a very special place to us.

GEORGE FISCHER,
HUSBAND OF THE LATE KAREN GREEN

This past year, the Foundation was the grateful recipient of a $2 million legacy gift from our dear supporter and friend, Karen Green-Fischer.

In the spirit of Karen’s lifetime support of so many areas across Women’s College Hospital (WCH), the impact of her gift will be shared across the hospital, supporting the purchase of new breast imaging equipment, fueling work in education and knowledge sharing driven by the Centre for Wise Practices in Indigenous Health, and establishing a new awards program intended to fund breakthrough research.

Guided by her values and passion for supporting education, culture and women’s health, Karen became a consummate champion for women’s health and an integral member of the 100Women group. Karen’s involvement in 100Women was felt deeply by our organization and the 100Women membership. We remember Karen – her warmth and kindness, her beautiful energy and the enduring legacy she leaves behind at Women’s College Hospital.

“ I’m proud to support Women’s College Hospital’s innovative and caring approach to women’s health. I was born at Women’s College Hospital and I was a registered nurse there for almost 15 years, so it will always have a special place in my heart. I wanted to give back to such a wonderful hospital that’s so pioneering in its work. ”

CHARLAINE SCADDING,
GRATEFUL PATIENT AND FORMER WCH NURSING STAFF

“ I am so grateful for the care I have received; I knew I had to give back’ says Anna. ‘I truly believe if you support a woman, you have supported the whole nation. That’s what Women’s College Hospital is doing. ”

ANNA*,
GRATEFUL PATIENT OF THE CROSSROADS CLINIC

Driving Forward Excellence through Philanthropy

Since Dr. Emily Stowe founded our hospital in 1883, we’ve been breaking down barriers to care for everyone. Today, Women’s is the only hospital of its kind in Canada with a focus on addressing the unique healthcare needs of women and advancing health equity for all.

Standing alongside us in this journey has been our dedicated community of donors and supporters, most notably our 100Women. 100Women is a community of leading women philanthropists committed to driving bold change for the future of healthcare by supporting Women’s College Hospital.

Since its launch in 2013, 100Women has evolved into one of Canada’s most powerful and impactful philanthropic groups led by women, for women. Over the past 10 years, 100Women members have collectively given more than $38 million to support care, research, innovation and education spanning across almost every program area of the hospital.

Together, the 100Women have become champions of the healthcare revolution and we stand together to inspire transformation and affect deep change for the health of women and for all.

We’re so grateful for this empowered group of women philanthropists who have been incredible champions of our hospital’s mission and vision – and are a true driving force behind our hospital’s ability to make health equity a reality for everyone.

“ I am inspired by the stories of resilience and courage that I hear from women who face challenges every day. I work to empower them and provide them with opportunities and resources to thrive, and I am motivated by the potential of innovation and collaboration to transform health care for women. Women’s is a leader in research, education, and care for women’s health issues. I want to contribute to their efforts and make a difference in the lives of women and their families. ”
